 English Writing Essay – Is War Ever Justifiable?

In this essay I will be exploring the question 'Is War Ever Justifiable?' War has been going on for centuries. Philosophers pondered whether war is ever justifiable. Different views and theories have developed throughout the centuries and attempted to solve this dilemma. Using religious guidelines, ethical theories and general arguments, I will decide for myself whether or not war can be justified. I feel that war is not justifiable in most cases however there is a factor over reasonable to what someone lives or to how many I think war is only justified when it is to be absolute for most.

There are several reasons why I and many people believe war is not justifiable. The most justifiable consequence of war is the loss of innocent civilian lives. Children, who could have lived to make a huge impact on the world. When war comes everyone suffers. Any kind of war is unjustifiable because it involves only killing. And what kind of victory does one get? Victory over millions of dead human beings. Victory over the broken hearts of the family and relatives of the dead. Victory over shattered millions of homes, schools, hospitals, and lives. How can a war ever be justified? The deaths of innocent lives can not be ignored. I understand people might disagree with me, stating although innocent lives may be lost it may help make a positive change in a country in the future. This to me is a misguided argument as people begin to realize that it doesn't always turn out for them. Take World War I for example. When did they realize out of WWI was a total disaster and the war was supposedly set to bring peace created another war - World War II. Violence will only cause more violence.

In addition I strongly believe that wars are caused by powerful people who want to increase their wealth. War is done to greed, anger and selfishness. Only the leaders are to be blamed. The leaders do not fight for themselves, instead they get everything they want and expect them to do the fighting and take the risk of being killed. Some argue that it is everyone's duty to fight because country and it is also a great honor to die for one's country even if one doesn't believe in a religion. Again I think this is an untrue argument. These people don't realize that they are being tricked and putting themselves in danger. Furthermore they are killing the leaders in the process. Only weak-minded people feel that they can only win through physical power. Look at Gandhi. He defied the British without resorting to war. War is not necessary and it's not a good solution for revenge.

Furthermore I believe one country does not have the right to intervene in another country's business. I think this is the main source of most wars. One country tries to win another country's business and before you know it you're in a conflict. Like the war in Iraq how did that start? The US thought
